The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has begun soliciting public comment about whether changes are needed for federal regulations requiring irradiated food to be labeled as such.

Currently, the FDA requires that retail packages or displays of irradiated food include both the logo for irradiation and a statement like "treated by irradiation," and that such notices be prominently displayed. The FDA is asking whether irradiation labeling should be less conspicuously displayed, such as being included as part of a list of ingredients.

(Pro-irradiation groups have argued against the necessity of prominent labeling, or the necessity of labeling, since the process has been deemed safe. They see requiring overt labeling as dissuading consumer acceptance of irradiated foods.) However, others argue prominent labeling is needed in order to give shoppers a choice between products.

Comments: I feel that both the Irradiation of food and the Genetic manipulation of any food, or other product, are and always have been, unsafe. I am adamantly opposed to both of these practices and stand with every other consumer that is at risk of being deceived, and is denied the opportunity to choose for myself what is introduced into my body and onto my planet. It is clearly an act of deception and neglect not to label such products.

Sincerely,
Demian R. Potter
